FIRST READ

It seems that young people can stay glued to their cell phones for as long as the battery holds out. It has a similar effect when they are out of power, says the Association of Mobile American Citizens. But now there is news that the industry is developing opportunities that will keep them from the time between charging. One company is testing its batteries' ability to power a smartphone for 24 hours of talk time or 28 hours of continuous video play. — from 4/16/16
